FIELD TRIP – VENNEALA BAILU - ARCHAEOLOGICAL SITE

The Department of History GDC Yellandu visited an archaeological site at Vennala Bailu, Gundala Mandal Bhadradi Kothagudem. The site's importance is that it belongs to the Megalithic Burials period, which is a significant phase in the prehistoric era.

Megalithic Burials refer to the practice of building large stone structures as tombs or burial places. These structures were constructed using large stones and were primarily used for burying important individuals, such as rulers or chiefs. The Megalithic Burials period is believed to have started around 3000 BCE and lasted until 1000 BCE.

The Megalithic Burials are an essential part of understanding the prehistoric era, as they provide insight into the social and cultural practices of ancient civilizations. By studying these structures, historians and archaeologists can learn about the beliefs, customs, and daily life of these ancient societies.

The archaeological site at Vennala Bailu is a valuable resource for understanding the Megalithic Burials period and the prehistoric era as a whole. The students who visited the site would have had the opportunity to learn firsthand about the history and culture of their region, making their visit a valuable educational experience.
