Introduction

Small industries can exercise a stabilizing influence on the vagaries and uncertainties of rural economy besides contributing to its prosperity. Apart from increased production, its development helps to serve as an important pillar in the country's march towards industrial democracy. They are ideally suited to India's economic resources and needs and they act as a valuable adjunct to the country's plans for rapid industrialization, particularly in the underdeveloped areas. They facilitate effective mobilization of resources, capital and skill, particularly in the rural areas, which might otherwise remain either dormant or inadequately utilize. Based on local skill and resources, these industries can be set up in any part of the country and hence are an invaluable instrument to carry the fruits of industrialization to every nook and corner, thereby tending to ensure a harmoniously balanced, integrated and egalitarian socio-economic order in the country.

Small Scale Industries that are performing better make a great positive effect on economic growth of the State and the Nation.
