Orientation Program Conducted:

Introduction: The Anti-Ragging Committee of Chanchalguda Degree College conducted an orientation program under the chairmanship of principal and committee for newly joined students of groups B.A, B.COM, & B.SC for every year before the commencement of academic year.

Methodology: The program was conducted in two sessions. On the first day, a presentation was made by the Anti-Ragging Committee members, highlighting the consequences of ragging and the legal measures taken by the government to curb ragging in educational institutions. The students were also informed about the various ways in which they could report incidents of ragging and the support available to them in case they become victims of ragging.

On the second day, a workshop was conducted, where the students were divided into groups and encouraged to share their experiences and ideas on how to prevent ragging in the college. The students actively participated in the workshop and came up with innovative ideas to promote a friendly and supportive campus environment.

Results: The orientation program was a huge success, with all newly joined students actively participating and engaging in the program. These measures succeeded in creating awareness among students about the harmful effects of ragging and motivated them to contribute to the creation of ragging free environment.

Conclusion: The Anti-Ragging Committee of Chanchalaguda Degree College conducted a highly effective orientation program for newly joined students. The program succeeded in creating awareness among students about the harmful effects of ragging and motivated them to contribute to the creation of a safe and peaceful campus environment. The college administration commends the Anti-Ragging Committee for their efforts and looks forward to their continued support.
