Educating the Farmers on the Importance of Organic Farming

DEPARTMENT OF BOTANY & ECO CLUB

Date: 28-04-2022

Organic farming supports environmental health by lowering the amount of pollution, because there are fewer residues in the product, there are fewer risks to human and animal health. It aids in sustaining agricultural production at a certain level. It enhances soil health and lowers the cost of agricultural output.

As a result, the Department of Botany first taught the students the value of organic farming, and the students in turn educated the farmers by visiting the fields in Koduparty Village.
